

Health Care Immersion

The Clifford M. Lewis, S.J. Appalachian Institute
Wheeling Jesuit University

What will I be doing?

Health Care immersions introduce students to the difficulties of health care in rural areas to low-income individuals who have significant chronic health problems based on work-related demands, lifestyle choice, and heredity, but neither the transportation nor insurance needed to access the limited health services available in their communities. By participating with local health care providers and community activists, students are able to grasp the holistic methods necessary for treating impoverished individuals. The opportunity to have personal connections with low-income individuals in need of health care, forces students to come to grasp with their spiritual commitment to those in need through their own career choices.

St. Louis University students teach PATCH 21 pre-K students about the importance of teeth brushing and hand washing.

Service Site Examples

- Patch 21— The program currently serves 2,800 students in Roane, Jackson, and Mason Counties (1/4 the total after school population in WV) and operates 4 preschools in Roane, Jackson, and Clay County. PATCH successfully administers several different grants that focus on character education, tobacco, drug, and alcohol prevention, civic duty and service learning, watershed and clean water awareness, entrepreneurial job skills, and leadership. Service groups will organize and conduct public health programming for the Patch kids around a pertinent topic.
- Blood Sugar/Blood Pressure Screening clinics—in cooperation with various organizations, immersion groups organize and conduct free diabetes testing clinics for rural residents.
- Rural Clinic and Hospital Shadowing—students will be able to learn about the uniqueness of rural health care by observing local nurses and doctors at work in small clinics and hospitals.
- Low-Income Health Care Visits—to put a face to low-income health care issues, students visit locals who are not only burdened by severe health issues, but also a lack of insurance.
- Public Health Programming—regional experts will present interactive presentations and tours on health issues like prescription drug abuse, work-related health, addiction, environmental health impacts, and the general structure of rural health care.

“He who has health, has hope. And he who has hope, has everything.” ~Proverb

How much?

The trip costs $300/person/week with a minimum of 10 people. If the group has less than 10, the cost will still be the same as if they had the full number. This cost includes meals (unless eating off-site), lodging, programming, and resource materials. Deposits must be made approximately 6 months in advance.

Wheeling Jesuit U. student teaches defibrillation at a local public health clinic.

Where will I be staying?

Rock Lake Community Center

This new community center, located in a beautiful old rock quarry, is a safe and local place for community and cultural programming serving area youth, adults, and seniors. Community gardens and various programming allow for a richer experience for students. Facilities include outdoor hiking, cots, kitchen, and showers

Rock Lake Quarry—a great place to hike!

Where do I sign up?!

If you would like more information about the Appalachian Service Immersion trips, please contact:

- Beth Dale, Assistant Director, The Appalachian Institute: 304-243-4361 (office)
ai@wju.edu
- Julia Flint, Immersion Trips Coordinator,
The Appalachian Institute:
304-243-6241 (office)
ai@wju.edu

Mingo County Head Start children learn the importance of teeth brushing with a little help from Mr. Mouth!